

Chin Jhin Thien & Anor

v

Chin Huat Yean @ Chin Chun Yean & Anor

Federal Court – Civil Appeal No. 02(f)-29-04/2019(P)

Mohd Zawawi Salleh, Idrus Harun, Nallini Pathmanathan, Zaleha Yusof and Hasnah Mohammed Hashim FCJJ

July 7, 2020

Probate and administration – Wills – Validity of – Appeal – Revocation of grant of probate – Finding by High Court that deceased lacked testamentary capacity to make will due to terminal illness and that deceased unduly influenced and cheated by defendants – Defendants claiming secret trust created and that they are merely trustees for true beneficiaries of deceased’s will – Whether concept of secret trust applicable in Malaysia – Whether secret trust applicable in cases involving issue of testamentary capacity of testator – Whether secret trust contradictory to the Wills Act 1959 and/or is against public policy – Civil Law Act 1956, s 3(1), 3(1)(a) – Federal Constitution, Article 160 – Interpretation Acts 1948 and 1987, s 3 – Wills Act 1959

Trusts and trustees – Secret trust – Revocation of grant of probate – Appeal – Defendants claiming secret trust created and that they are merely trustees for true beneficiaries of deceased’s will – Finding by High Court that deceased lacked testamentary capacity to make will due to terminal illness and that deceased unduly influenced and cheated by defendants – Whether concept of secret trust applicable in Malaysia – Whether secret trust applicable in cases involving issue of testamentary capacity of testator – Whether secret trust contradictory to the Wills Act 1959 and/or is against public policy – Civil Law Act 1956, s 3(1), 3(1)(a) – Federal Constitution, Article 160 – Interpretation Acts 1948 and 1987, s 3 – Wills Act 1959

The appellants ("the plaintiffs") are the lawful children of the marriage between the deceased and his first wife which ended in a divorce in 1991. The deceased subsequently married his second wife with whom he had four children. The deceased also had a third wife but there were no offspring from that marriage. The marriages between the deceased and the second and third wives were not registered.

Prior to his passing on December 24, 2013, the deceased who had been diagnosed with fourth stage renal cancer/terminal cancer had by his will dated December 18, 2013 which was prepared by an advocate and solicitor ("DW1") and witnessed by DW1's secretary ("DW2"), given all his assets and properties to his elder brother, the first respondent ("the first defendant") and the second respondent ("the second defendant") who is the first defendant's son both of whom then proceeded to obtain the grant of probate on February 2, 2014.

The plaintiffs subsequently commenced proceedings in the High Court and obtained a declaration that the alleged last will and testament of the deceased is void under the law. The plaintiffs also obtained an order declaring the grant of probate null and void and for the same to be revoked and cancelled. The plaintiffs' claim in essence was premised on the ground that the deceased lacked the testamentary capacity to make the will as he was suffering from terminal cancer at the material time or that undue influence had been exerted on the deceased by the defendants. The defendants disputed the plaintiffs' allegations and contended that they are not the true beneficiaries of the will but are trustees for the benefit of the second wife and her children and that a secret trust had been created under the will.

The High Court found in favour of the plaintiffs and declared the will as being invalid and that the deceased had died intestate. Based on the facts before it, the High Court was of the view that the deceased did not have the testamentary capacity to make the will; that there were suspicious circumstances surrounding the making of the will; that the deceased was manipulated, unduly influenced and cheated by the defendants into making the will; and that the secret trust defence of the defendants had not been established.

Upon appeal by the defendants, the order of the High Court was set aside by the Court of Appeal on the grounds inter alia that the High Court had misdirected itself by combining the issue of secret trust with that of testamentary capacity. In this regard, the Court of Appeal was of the view that testamentary capacity is related to medical or credible evidence and has nothing to do with the doctrine of secret trust; that the High Court had failed to give credence to the evidence of the defendants; and that the requirements for the formality of a valid will had been satisfied. Hence the instant appeal on the leave questions as stated below. The principal argument by the plaintiffs is that neither the Civil Law Act 1956 ("the CLA") nor any of the other Acts of Parliament recognise the doctrine of secret trust nor are there any decisions by the Federal Court endorsing and propounding the concept of secret trust in Malaysia. It was also submitted that the doctrine of secret trust is against public policy as it is used to assist the testator's purported "sin" or "skeletons in the cupboard" to benefit his "genes or acquaintance".

1 Issues

1. Whether the concept of secret trust is applicable in Malaysia as there is no decision regarding the applicability of secret trust ("the first leave question").
2. Whether secret trust is applicable in a case involving the issue of testamentary capacity of a testator ("the second leave question").
3. Whether secret trust is contradictory to the Wills Act 1959 ("the WA 1959") and/or is against public policy as it can be abused ("the third leave question").

15 Held, dismissing the appeal with costs and affirming the decision of the Court of Appeal

1. (a) The effect of the definition of the word "law" in Article 160 of the Federal Constitution ("the Constitution") and the definition of "common law" and "written law" in s 3 of the Interpretation Acts 1948 and 1987 is that both written law and common law are sources of law in Malaysia. It follows therefore that unless there is an explicit abrogation, variation, restriction or modification by written law, the concept of secret trust which is part of the law of trust and is governed by the rules of equity and the common law of England, is applicable in Malaysia subject to the proviso to s 3(1) of the CLA. [see p 555 para 34 - p 556 para 36]

(b) The concept of secret trust is statutorily applicable in Malaysia. The WA 1959 or other statutes or Acts of Parliament do not explicitly abrogate the application of a secret trust nor does the proviso to s 3(1)(a) of the CLA exclude the applicability of the law on trust and secret trust. There are no cogent reasons to abrogate secret trust in Malaysia. [see p 556 para 39 - p 557 para 44]

(c) On the evidence, the deceased had intended to provide for his second wife's children some of whom were still studying at the material time and who were the only next of kin who were dependent on him for financial support. In the circumstances and bearing in mind the defendants' evidence that the estate of the deceased was not for their own benefit but is to be used for the benefit of the second wife and her children, it would be in the interest of justice for the secret trust to be upheld. Accordingly, the

- first leave question is answered in the affirmative. [see p 558 paras 45-48] 1
2. (a) As was laid down in Banks v Goodfellow (1870) LR 5 QB 549, a partial unsoundness of mind not affecting the person's general faculties and not operating on the person's mind in regard to a particular testamentary disposition, will not be sufficient to deprive the person of the power to dispose of the person's property in a will. [see p 559 para 54] 5 10
- (b) What is meant by testamentary capacity is that the testator must be fully conscious, has a sound mind and understands and approves the contents of the will. Testamentary capacity cannot be equated with contractual capacity. Mere proof of serious illness is insufficient to displace prima facie testamentary capacity and due execution. There must be clear evidence that the illness of the testator had so affected his mental faculties so as to make the deceased unequal to the task of disposing of his property. Essentially it is sufficient for the testator at the time the will is executed, to have sufficient mental ability to understand that he is making a will, the effect of making the will and the general nature and extent of his property. The duty of the court is to give effect to the will and not to deprive the testator of the right to select the beneficiaries based on his wish. [see p 560 para 58; p 561 para 62; p 561 para 64; p 565 para 76 - p 566 para 76] 15 20 25 30
- (c) As was correctly found by the Court of Appeal, the High Court had misapprehended the concept of secret trust and misdirected its mind in finding that the deceased lacked the testamentary capacity to make the will. The High Court had failed to consider sufficiently or at all, the evidence and facts that are favourable to the defendant. Accordingly, appellate interference with the High Court's finding of facts on the issue of the deceased's testamentary capacity, is warranted. In the circumstances, the second leave question is irrelevant but if the question must be answered then it must be answered in the affirmative. [see p 570 para 83 - p 572 para 85] 35 40
3. The overriding purpose behind secret trusts is to enable property to be left in a will without explicitly naming who the property is being left to, by a bequest to a person who has previously promised to hold that property for the intended recipient. The court may intervene if there is

1 a risk of an unconscionable result such as the denial of a testator's wishes. A secret trust operates outside the will i.e. "dehors the will" and as a creature of common law, it operates outside the formalities of the 5 WA 1959. It is a form of an inter vivos express trust in which the testator and trustee mutually agree to form a relationship for the lifetime of the testator. Any inconsistency or contradiction between the doctrine of secret trust and the WA 1959, is a non-starter. In the premises, the 10 answer to the third leave question is in the negative. [see p 572 para 87 -
p 574 para 94; p 576 para 102 - p 577 para 102]

Cases referred to by the court

- 15 Banks v Goodfellow (1870) LR 5 QB 549, QB (UK) (foll)
Blackwell v Blackwell [1929] AC 318, HL (UK) (ref)
Carmel Mary Soosai v Josephine Lourdsamy Ratnavathy R Soosai & Ors [1987] CLJ
(Rep) 498, HC (ref)
- 20 Choo Mooi Kooi @ Choo Soo Yin v Choo Choon Jin @ Jimmy Choo (and Other Suits)
[2011] AMEJ 0481; [2012] 2 MLJ 691, HC (ref)
Gan Yook Chin & Anor v Lee Ing Chin & Ors [2004] 6 AMR 781; [2004] 4 CLJ 309, FC (ref)
- 25 Hassan b Kadir & 2 Ors v Mohamed Moidu b Mohamed & Anor [2011] 4 AMR 677;
[2018] MLJ (Supp) 266, FC (foll)
In Re Estate of Luce 21 ITEL 484, CA (US) (foll)
In The Matter of The Estate of Eva Burns, deceased: Burns & Ors v Burn [2016]
- 30 EWCA Civ 37
Key & Anor v Key & Anor [2010] EWHC 408, ChD (UK) (ref)
Khaw Cheng Bok & Ors v Khaw Cheng Poon & Ors [1998] 3 MLJ 457, HC (ref)
- 35 Kishan Singh v Nichhattar Singh & Ors AIR 1983 P&H 373, HC (India) (ref)
Lee Ing Chin @ Lee Teck Seng & 4 Ors v Gan Yook Chin (p) & Anor [2003] 2 AMR
357; [2003] 2 MLJ 97, CA (foll)
Majlis Perbandaran Ampang Jaya v Steven Phoa Cheng Loon & 81 Ors [2006] 2
40 AMR 563; [2006] 2 CLJ 1, FC (ref)
Nicholson v Knaggs [2009] VSC 64, SC (Aust) (ref)
Ong Eng Hock & Anor v Ong Cheng Guan & Anor [2018] 4 AMR 934; [2016] 7
CLJ 154, FC (ref)
Ottaway v Norman [1972] 2 WLR 50, ChD (UK) (ref)
Re Simpson (deceased); Schaniel v Simpson [1977] 121 SJ 224 (UK) (ref)
Re Snowden (deceased) [1979] Ch 528, ChD (UK) (ref)
Re Tan Soh Sim (deceased); Chan Lam Keong & 4 Ors v Tan Saw Keow & 3 Ors
[1951] 1 LNS 77, HC (ref)
Re Young (deceased) [1951] Ch 344
Tan Cheu Kee v Lim Siew Hwa [2016] AMEJ 2304; [2016] 1 LNS 1684, HC (ref)

Tho Yow Pew & Anor v Chua Kooi Hean [2002] 3 AMR 3703; [2002] 4 CLJ 90, CA (ref)	1
Tony Pua Kiam Wee v Government of Malaysia (and Another Appeal) [2019] 8 AMR 325; [2020] 1 CLJ 337, FC (ref)
Tsang Tat Hung & Anor v Tsang Tat Wing [2017] HKCU 1165, CA (Hong Kong) (ref)	5
Udham Singh v Indar Kaur [1971] 2 MLJ 263, FC (ref)
Legislation referred to by the court	10
Malaysia
Civil Law Act 1956, s 3, 3(1), (1)(a)
Evidence Act 1950, s 100	15
Federal Constitution, Articles 150, 160
Interpretation Acts 1948 and 1967, s 3
Wills Act 1959, s 30
United Kingdom
Wills Act 1837	20
Other references	25
Alastair Hudson, Equity and Trusts , 8th Edn, (Routledge, 2015), p 323
Alastair Hudson, Equity & Trusts , 9th Edn, (Routledge, 2015), p 70
Halsbury's Laws of England , 4th Edn, (Butterworths, London, 2007 Reissue)
Halsbury's Laws of England , 4th Edn, Vol 17, paragraph 898	30
LA Sheridan, "English and Irish Secret Trusts" [1951] 67 LQR 314
Lewin on Trusts, 18th Edn, (Sweet & Maxwell, 2008), paragraphs 3-077, 672
Nwudego Nkemakonam Chinwuba, "Filling The Gaps Between Colonial Legal Heritage And Prevailing Local Customs In Family Relations: The Place Of Secret Trust", African Journal of International and Comparative Law , Vol 24(1) (2016), pp 45-63	35
Sarkar, The Law of Evidence , 14th Edn, Vol 2, p 1396
Snell's Equity , (33rd Edn, Sweet & Maxwell, 2015), pp 660, 663, paragraphs 24-031, 24-023	40
Tommy Cheung, "Secret Trusts and Testamentary Freedom in Trust & Trustees", Vol 25(7), (2019), pp 730-736
Watt G, Trusts and Equity , 4th Edn, (Oxford University Press, 2010), p 180
John Khoo, Jason Ong and Navaneetha Krishnan (Ong & Assoc) for appellants Justin Voon Tiam Yu, Lee Chooi Peng and Lin Pei Sin (Justin Voon Chooi & Wing) for respondents
Appeal from Court of Appeal – Civil Appeal No. P-02(NCvC)(W)-2300-11/2017

1 Judgment received: July 15, 2020

Mohd Zawawi Salleh FCJ (delivering the judgment of the court)

5 Introduction

[1] This is an appeal from the judgment of the Court of Appeal dated October 13, 2018 in terms of which it allowed the appeal by the 10 appellants/defendants against the judgment of the High Court at Pulau Pinang dated October 24, 2017. The High Court had allowed the respondents'/plaintiffs' claim, revoked the grant of probate issued to the appellants/defendants and inter alia declared that the will dated December 15 18, 2013 alleged to be the last will and testament of one Chin Joo Ngan ("deceased") as invalid and the deceased had died intestate.

[2] The appeal was by leave granted by this court on March 18, 2019 on the 20 following questions of law:

First leave question

25 i. Whether the concept of secret trust is applicable to Malaysia as there is no decision regarding the applicability of secret trust.

Second leave question

30 ii. Whether secret trust is applicable in a case involving the issue of testamentary capacity of a testator.

Third leave question

35 iii. Whether secret trust is contradictory to the Malaysian Wills Act 1959 and/or is against public policy as it can be abused.

[3] We heard the appeal on February 24, 2020 and at the conclusion of arguments of the parties, we dismissed the plaintiffs'/appellants' appeal 40 with costs. We now give the detailed grounds for our decision.

[4] For convenience, we will refer to the parties by their designation at the High Court: the appellants as the plaintiffs and the respondents as the defendants.

Factual background and antecedents proceedings

[5] The first plaintiff and the second plaintiff are the lawful children of the deceased.

- [6] The first defendant is the elder brother of the deceased and the second defendant is the son of the first defendant and nephew of the deceased. Both the defendants reside in Australia. 1
- [7] The deceased by profession was an engineer and had three wives, namely: 5
- i. Chan Cheng Lian ("first wife");
 - ii. Chan Cheng Geok ("second wife"); and 10
 - iii. Yeoh Bee Leng @ Katherine ("third wife").
- [8] Only the marriage between the deceased and the first wife was registered. The deceased married the first wife on July 14, 1976. The remaining two marriages were not registered. 15
- [9] The plaintiffs are the deceased's children from his first wife's marriage. The deceased had four children with the second wife, of whom two were still studying when the deceased died, and the youngest was still a minor at the time. The deceased and the third wife had no children. 20
- [10] It is important to note that the second wife is the first wife's elder sister. The second wife had a marital affair with the deceased while the first marriage subsisted. 25
- [11] Sometime in 1985, the first wife found out about her husband's affair with her sister. Unable to accept the mistrust and betrayal, the first wife eventually filed for divorce and was granted a decree nisi on August 8, 1991. The decree nisi, however, has not been made absolute. 30
- [12] In the meantime, the deceased married his third wife who was also his business partner. His third wife was not called as a witness during the trial. Nevertheless, their wedding photographs were tendered to show that they went through a Chinese customary marriage ceremony. 35
- [13] The deceased was diagnosed with fourth stage renal cancer/terminal cancer in 2013. In September 2013, the deceased underwent surgery to remove his kidney due to a growth and tumor. 40
- [14] The family conflicts arise from the will made by the deceased dated December 18, 2013. The will was prepared by an advocate and solicitor named Peter Huang ("DW1") who also witnessed the will together with his secretary, Lau Ean Nah ("DW2"), on December 18, 2013. Under this will, the deceased gave all his assets and properties to the defendants.

1 [15] The deceased died six days after the will was made, that is to say, on December 24, 2013. Coincidentally, the date of birth of the deceased is also on the 24th of December.

5 [16] The defendants later obtained the grant of probate on February 12, 2014 at the Kuala Lumpur High Court.

[17] Consequently, the plaintiffs filed a civil suit at the Pulau Pinang High Court and seeking, inter alia, for the following:

10 (a) an order that the grant of probate issued by the Kuala Lumpur High Court is declared null and void in law and is revoked and cancelled;
and

15 (b) a declaration that the will dated December 18, 2013 alleged to be the last will and testament of the deceased is void under the law.

20 Proceedings before the High Court

[18] At the High Court, the plaintiffs challenged the validity of the will on two main grounds:

25 (a) The deceased had no testamentary capacity to make the will as he was suffering from terminal cancer; and

(b) The defendants had cheated and unduly influenced the deceased.

30 [19] The suit was resisted by the defendants. They categorically disputed the allegations and averred that the deceased was mentally alert, lucid, and capable of making the will. The defendants also contended that they are not the true beneficiaries of the will as they are only trustees for the benefits of the 35 deceased's second wife and her children. In the upshot, the defendants claim that a secret trust was created under the will.

40 [20] As we have alluded to earlier, on October 24, 2017, the learned High Court judge allowed the plaintiffs' claim, revoked the grant of probate issued to the defendants and inter alia declared the will dated December 18, 2013 to be invalid and that the deceased had died intestate.

[21] The learned High Court judge had considered all the central issues presented in the case. We can summarise the learned High Court's reasoning and conclusions as follows:

(i) The deceased did not have the testamentary capacity to make the will dated December 18, 2013 based on the following facts:

(a) Dr Git Kah Ann ("PW1"), the urologist who treated the deceased had stated in his letter dated December 13, 2013 that

- at the material time the deceased was still having trouble to cope with the disease, mentally and physically; 1
- (b) there was no certification by any medical practitioner as to the mental capacity of the deceased on December 18, 2013. Reliance was placed on the case of Re Simpson, Deceased; Schaniel v Simpson [1977] 121 SJ 224 where it was held that the making of a will by an old and infirm testator ought to be witnessed and approved by a medical practitioner who satisfies himself as to the capacity and understanding of the testator and makes a record of his examination and findings; 5 10
- (c) DW1, the lawyer who prepared the will and also witnessed the will together with his secretary on December 18, 2013 did not know anything about the deceased's medical background and mental capacity; and 15
- (d) the oral testimony of the first plaintiff of his meeting with the deceased on December 18, 2013 reveals that his father cannot talk and was unable to recognise him. 20
- (ii) There were suspicious circumstances surrounding the making of the will and that the defendants had manipulated, unduly influenced and cheated the deceased to make the will to give all the assets to the defendants based on the following facts: 25
- (a) suspicious circumstances were not denied by the defendants. 30
- (b) established facts depict clearly that it was the first defendant who wanted to make the will. There is not much of a communication between DW1, the lawyer who prepared the will and the deceased. It is only a formality that the deceased had to sign the will and all parties had to be present before the lawyer. 35 40
- (c) there is a special relationship between the first defendant and the deceased.
- (d) the deceased was under the control of the defendants from December 17, 2013 to December 21, 2013.
- (iii) Secret trust defence was not established on the grounds that:
- (a) the whole idea of secret trust is an afterthought because the secret trust defence was only raised for the first time when the

1 defendants amended their defence one year after the defence was filed;

5 (b) DW1 has not done a secret trust and does not know about secret trust;

(c) the will itself did not mention a secret trust; and

10 (d) if the purpose of the secret trust is to give the deceased's properties to the deceased's second wife and her children, it would have been much easier for the deceased to say so expressly in the will.

15 [22] The learned judge also granted exemplary damages of RM25,000 to the plaintiffs because her Ladyship was of the view that the defendants had acted in contumelious disregard of the plaintiffs' rights when the defendants 20 acquired all the assets and properties of the deceased to make a profit for themselves and thereafter to dissipate and transfer the proceeds of the sales to Australia.

25 [23] Being dissatisfied with the decision of the High Court, the defendants appealed to the Court of Appeal.

Proceedings before Court of Appeal

30 [24] The Court of Appeal essentially allowed the appeal by the defendants and set aside the order of the High Court on the following grounds:

(i) Testamentary capacity

35 (a) It is trite that a testator could bequeath his estate to any person. The only instance the probate could be set aside is if the plaintiffs had established that the testator did not have testamentary capacity to execute the said will; and 40 (b) The learned judge had misdirected herself on the issue of testamentary capacity when her Ladyship combined the issue of secret trust with that of testamentary capacity. The approach taken by the learned judge was wrong in law.

Testamentary capacity was related to medical evidence or related to credible evidence and had nothing to do with the doctrine of secret trust.

(ii) Appreciation of the evidence

(a) The learned judge did not give much credence to the evidence of the defendants in the judgment. The learned judge had no

- benefit of hearing the evidence or seeing the demeanour of the urologist who treated the deceased i.e. Dr Git Kah Ann (PW1) because PW1 gave evidence before YA Dato' Azmi bin Ariffin on March 23, 2017 who heard the case in part before he was transferred to another court. PW1's testimony was crucial evidence relating to testamentary capacity; 1 5
- (b) PW1's witness statement does not in a definite form assert that the deceased lacked testamentary capacity; and 10
- (c) The evidence of DW1, the lawyer who prepared the will was not discredited neither was the evidence of his secretary (DW2) who also witnessed the will. There is no cogent reason why their testimony should not be disbelieved or at least for the limited purpose to say the formalities of a valid will had been duly satisfied. 15
- (iii) Defence of the secret trust 20
- a) The law on secret trust was developed to assist the testator's purported "sins" for just and equitable reason to benefit his "genes or acquaintance" whether lawful or otherwise to provide some form of security to his beloved ones; 25
- b) The law on secret trust had developed in a manner to close its eyes on public policy or breach of the rule of law related to monogamous or polygamous marriage inclusive of polyandry or relationship of cohabitee. The court did not strike out the secret trust arguments based on illegality or public policy. There was nothing cynical or wrong even if it was meant for private trust or charitable trust; 30 35
- c) All the requirements for the formality of a valid will have been satisfied; and 40
- d) The plaintiffs were not able to demolish the defence of secret trust and there were good grounds to dispel any mala fide on the part of the defendants. The estate of the deceased will be used for the benefit of the deceased's second wife and their children and not for their own benefit.

1 Our decision

[25] Before turning to the leave questions, perhaps it would be useful to discuss briefly the law on secret trusts.

5 [26] Secret trusts enable a testator to direct the disposition of his or her property upon his or her death without specifying the actual beneficiary in the will whereby the property is bequeathed to a "legatee" who holds it as a trustee for the secret beneficiary. The motivating factor behind this arrangement for anonymity varied. Watt writes that the secret trust may initially have been created in response to the worries of men wishing to make provisions for a mistress and illegitimate children [see Watt G, Trusts and Equity (4th Edn, Oxford University Press, 2010) at p 180].

15 [27] Snell's Equity, (33rd Edn, Sweet & Maxwell, 2015), paragraph 24-023 at p 660 offers the following definition of secret trusts:

20 A secret trust gives effect to the express intentions of a testator which are not contained in a written document duly executed as a will. A will is a public document. The advantage of a secret trust is that the testator may use a will to implement his wish to establish a trust upon his death without disclosing the intended beneficiary or the terms under which he holds.

25 Secret trusts are a device by which the express intention of a person to make a testamentary gift may be enforced despite the testator's failure to comply with the formalities for the execution of a will or testamentary disposition under the Wills Act 1837. They demonstrate the rationale of preventing the fraudulent reliance on the statutory formalities as a justification for denying the enforceability of the secret trustee's expressly undertaken obligations ...

30 [28] There are two types of secret trusts. A full secret trust is an obligation which is fully concealed on the face of the will. The obligation is communicated to the legatee during the lifetime of the testator and the will transfers the property to the legatee without the mention of the existence of a trust, i.e. the existence and the terms of the trust are fully concealed on the face of the instrument creating the trust, namely the will, for example a disposition by will "to A absolutely". Whereas a half secret trust is intended when the will indicates or acknowledges the existence of the trust but the terms are concealed from testator's will. The trustee will take the property as communicated on the terms effected inter vivos, for example a deposition by will "to A on trust for the purpose communicated to him".

40 [29] By way of simple explanation, both types of secret trust essentially involve property being left in the will without actually naming the person to whom the property is being left to. The property is held on trust by someone who made a promise to the testator to hold the property on trust for the eventual recipient. 1

Establishing the existence of secret trust

[30] In Ottaway v Norman [1972] 2 WLR 50, Brightman J sets out the requisite elements necessary to prove the existence of a fully secret trust which covers the components of intention, communication and acceptance as follows: 5

It will be convenient to call the person on whom such a trust is imposed the "primary donee" and the beneficiary under that trust the "secondary donee". The essential elements which must be proved to exist are: (i) the intention of the testator to subject the primary donee to an obligation in favour of the secondary donee; (ii) communication of that intention to the primary donee; and (iii) the acceptance of that obligation by the primary donee either expressly or by acquiescence. It is immaterial whether these elements precede or succeed the will of the donor. I am informed that there is no recent reported case where the obligation imposed on the primary donee is an obligation to make a will in favour of the secondary donee as distinct from some form of inter vivos transfer. But it does not seem to me that that can really be a distinction which can validly be drawn on behalf of the defendant in the present case. The basis of the doctrine of a secret trust is the obligation imposed on the conscience of the primary donee and it does not seem to me that there is any materiality in the machinery by which the donor intends that that obligation shall be carried out. 10
15
20
25

[31] If it cannot be shown that the testator had the intention to create a secret trust, or withdrew his/her intention to create trust before his/her death, the court will not uphold the secret trust. Where a secret trust fails, the trustee will be entitled to the trust property absolutely with no obligation to the beneficiary. 30

[32] The standard of proof for proving a full secret trust or half secret trust is the ordinary civil standard of proof (i.e. balance of probabilities). In Re Snowden (deceased) [1979] Ch 528, Sir Robert Megarry VC observed: 35

I therefore hold that in order to establish a secret trust where no question of fraud arises, the standard of proof is the ordinary civil standard of proof that is required to establish an ordinary trust. I am conscious that this does not accord with what was said in Ottaway v Norman ([1971] 3 All ER 1325 at 1333; [1972] Ch 698 at 712), but I think the point was taken somewhat shortly there, and the judge does not seem to have had the advantage of having had cited to him the authorities that I have considered. For those reasons I have overcome my hesitation in differing from him. 40

[33] We now turn to the first leave question. The principal argument which learned counsel for the plaintiffs advances on this leave question that there is no recognition of the doctrine of secret trust, whether in Civil Law Act 1956,

1 or other Acts of Parliament. Neither are there any decisions by the Federal Court endorsing and propounding the concept of secret trust in Malaysia.
With respect, for the reasons set forth below, we disagree with the submission.

5 [34] The starting point to this question is the definition of the word "law".
Article 160 of the Federal Constitution defines "law" as to include "... written law, the common law in so far as it is in operation in the Federation or any 10 part thereof". Section 3 of the Interpretation Acts 1948 and 1967 (Act 388) further defines "common law" as "the common law of England". The said section also defines the meaning of "written law" which includes the Federal 15 Constitution, Acts of the Federal Parliament, Emergency Ordinances by the Yang di-Pertuan Agong under Article 150, Federal Subsidiary Legislation, 13 State Constitutions, Enactments and Ordinances of State Assemblies, State Subsidiary Legislations and local authority by-laws. The effect of these 20 definitions is that both written law and common law are sources of law in Malaysia. The common law would remain as a source of law, unless it has been abrogated, restricted and modified by written law, post-1956.

[35] Section 3(1) of the Civil Law Act 1956 provides that:

25 (1) Save so far as other provision has been made or may hereafter be made by any written law in force in Malaysia, the Court shall

30 (a) In Peninsular Malaysia or any part thereof, apply the common law of England and the rules of equity as administered in England on the 7 April 1956; ...

(b) ...

35 (c)

40 Provided always that the said common law, rules of equity and statutes of general application shall be applied so far only as the circumstances of the States of Malaysia and their respective inhabitants permit and subject to such qualifications as local circumstances render necessary.

[36] Since its incorporation, our courts have also applied the law on trusts, the rules of equity and the common law of England in Malaysia. In the case of Hassan bin Kadir & 2 Ors v Mohamed Moidu bin Mohamed & Anor [2011] 4 AMR 677 at 686; [2018] MLJ (Supp) 266 at 276, the Federal Court had affirmed the applicability of the law of trusts derived from the rules of equity in Malaysia by reason of the statutory application of s 3(1)(a) of the Civil Law
Act 1956, as stated in paragraph 24 of the law reports:

[24] It is trite that the modified form of the Torrens system of registration of titles relating to alienated land as applied under the Code does not prevent the creation of beneficial interest in land whether under "express trust", "constructive trust" or "resulting trust" arising out of the operation of law. This is derived from the rules of equity which is applicable in this country by virtue of the s 3 of the Civil Law Act 1956. 1

[37] Therefore, it follows that the concept of secret trust, which is part of the law of trust and is governed by the rules of equity and the common law of England, is applicable in Malaysia subject to the proviso to s 3(1) of the Civil Law Act 1956 unless there is an explicit abrogation, variation, restriction or modification by written law. In the case of Majlis Perbandaran Ampang Jaya v Steven Phoa Cheng Loon & 81 Ors [2006] 2 AMR 563; [2006] 2 CLJ 1, Abdul Hamid Mohamad FCJ (as he then was) stated: 5

Strictly speaking, when faced with the situation whether a particular principle of common law of England is applicable, first the court has to determine whether there is any written law in force in Malaysia. If there is, the court does not have to look anywhere else. If there is none, then the court should determine what is the common law as administered in England on April 7, 1956, in the case of West Malaysia. 10 15 20

[38] In the recent Federal Court case of Tony Pua Kiam Wee v Government of Malaysia (and Another Appeal) [2019] 8 AMR 325; [2020] 1 CLJ 337, Nallini Pathmanathan FCJ reiterated the principle of law that: 25

[106] ... for the common law position to be abrogated there must be specificity in terms of the written law altering irrevocably the common law position. 30

...

[108] There is a common law presumption that the common law shall continue to apply until and unless the Legislature passes law with the express intention of excluding it ... 35

[See also Pihak Berkuasa Tatatertib Majlis Perbandaran Seberang Perai & Anor v Muziadi bin Mukhtar [2019] 7 AMR 521; [2020] 1 CLJ 1 (FC).]

[39] In the light of the foregoing provisions, the concept of secret trust is statutorily applicable in Malaysia. What is apparent is that the Malaysian Wills Act 1959 or other statutes or Acts of Parliament do not explicitly abrogate the application of secret trust. In fact, its application is endorsed in the written law. Section 30 of the Wills Act 1959 provides as follows: 40

30. Construction of wills.

- (1) A will made in any of the States of Selangor, Perak, Negeri Sembilan or Pahang before the coming into force of this Act and a will made in either of the States of Penang and Malacca shall, if such will would immediately before the commencement of this Act have been construed in accordance with the Wills Enactment 1938 [F.M.S. 5 of

1 1938], of the Federated Malay States or the Wills Ordinance of the Straits Settlements [S.S. Cap. 53] respectively, continue to be construed in accordance with such provisions, notwithstanding any repeal of that Enactment or Ordinance.

5 (2) For the purposes of subsection (1) a will re-executed, re-published or revived by a codicil shall be deemed to have been made at the time when it was so re-executed, re-published or revived.

10 (3) Save as provided by subsection (1) and subject to this Act, section 100 of the Evidence Act 1950 [Act 56] shall apply to the construction of all wills required to be construed in accordance with the law of Malaysia as if the words "in the Settlements or either of them" appearing in such section had been omitted.

15 [40] Section 100 of the Evidence Act 1950 provides as follows:

100. Construction of wills.

20 Nothing in sections 91 to 99 shall affect the construction of wills, but in the States of Malacca, Penang, Sabah and Sarawak or any of them they shall, subject to any written law, be construed according to the rules of construction which would be applicable thereto if they were being construed in a Court of Justice in England.

25 [41] By virtue of these provisions, the applicable law for the interpretation of will made in Penang, as in the present appeal, which purport to create a secret trust is that of English law and rules of equity.

30 [42] The proviso to s 3(1)(a) of the Civil Law Act 1956 does not exclude the applicability of the law on trust and secret trust. This is because the court upholds secret trust to prevent fraud on a testator and the rules of equity are 35 applied to compel the trustee under a will to fulfill his promises to the testator.

40 [43] Furthermore, secret trusts depend on the operation of equity to be effective. As Snell wrote:

Secret trusts are a device by which the express intention of a person to make a testamentary gift may be enforced despite the testator's failure to comply with the formalities for the execution of a will or testamentary disposition under the Wills Act 1837. They demonstrate the rationale of preventing the fraudulent reliance on the statutory formalities as a justification for denying the enforceability of the secret trustee's expressly undertaken obligation. (See Snell's Equity, 32nd Edn, Ch 24.)

[44] In our considered view, there is no cogent reason to "abrogate" secret trust in Malaysia. There are circumstances in which a testator creates "secret trust" to facilitate the intention to provide for certain parties.

[45] In this instant appeal, the evidence reveals that the deceased intended to provide for his second wife's children as they are the only next of kin who are dependent on the deceased for financial support and some of them are still studying at the material time. The deceased trusted the first defendant (his brother) and the second defendant (his nephew) to manage the estate wisely to take care of the second wife's children's needs. The plaintiffs on the other hand are working adults, and had not been in contact with the deceased for more than seven years and were not on good terms with the deceased.

[46] Both the defendants gave evidence under oath that the estate of the deceased would be used for the benefit of the deceased's second wife and their children and not for their own benefit.

[47] In the circumstances of the case, it is also in the interests of justice that the secret trust is upheld so that the deceased's estate is also not given to benefit the defendants, but to uphold the wishes of the deceased.

[48] Therefore, the first leave question is answered in the affirmative.

The second leave question

[49] At the outset, we note that the second leave question is not relevant to the determination of this instant appeal. It must be distinctly remembered that the plaintiffs' case is not related to the law on secret trust. The plaintiffs' case is anchored mainly on the ground that the deceased had no testamentary capacity to make the will or that there was undue influence exerted on the deceased. The defendants' case is that there was no undue influence exerted on the deceased because the defendants are not true beneficiaries but trustees under a secret trust who hold the property for the benefit of the deceased's second wife and their children. The elements to prove secret trust and testamentary capacity of a testator are different.

[50] In any event, we will deal with the second leave question as follows.

[51] We have dealt with the elements to prove a secret trust in paragraphs 30 to 32 of this judgment.

Testamentary capacity of a testator

[52] Generally speaking, testamentary capacity refers to the ability of a person to make a valid will. From the authorities, testamentary capacity is referred to as the "sound disposing mind" of the testator. A testator is said to have testamentary capacity when the testator is fully conscious, has a sound mind, understands and approves the contents of the will.

1 [53] The meaning of testamentary capacity was explained by Cockburn CJ in Banks v Goodfellow (1870) LR 5 QB 549, in the following words:

5 It is essential to the exercise of such a power that a testator shall understand the nature of the act and its effects; shall understand the extent of the property of which he is disposing; shall be able to comprehend and appreciate the claims to which he ought to give effect; and, with a view to the latter object, that no disorder of the mind shall poison his affections, pervert his sense of right, or prevent the exercise of his natural 10 faculties – that no insane delusion shall influence his will in disposing of his property and bring about a disposal of it which, if the mind had been sound, would not have been made

...

15 In deciding upon the capacity of the testator to make his will, it is the soundness of the mind and not the particular state of bodily health, that is to be attended to; the latter may be in a state of extreme imbecility, and yet he may possess sufficient understanding to direct how his property shall be disposed of ...

20 (Emphasis added.)

[54] The case of Banks v Goodfellow (supra) not only lays down the test for will-making capacity, but also makes it clear that a partial unsoundness of 25 mind, not affecting the person's general faculties and operating on the person's mind in regard to a particular testamentary disposition, will not be sufficient to deprive the person of the power to dispose of their property in a will.

30 [55] The Federal Court in Udham Singh v Indar Kaur [1971] 2 MLJ 263 and Gan Yook Chin & Anor v Lee Ing Chin & Ors [2004] 6 AMR 781; [2004] 4 CLJ 309
adopted and applied the meaning of testamentary capacity as enunciated by 35 Chief Justice Cockburn in Banks v Goodfellow (supra).

[56] The term "sound disposing mind" was further explained by Jeffrey Tan J
(as he then was) in Khaw Cheng Bok & Ors v Khaw Cheng Poon & Ors [1998] 3 40 MLJ 457 in the following words:

... formal validity of a will is that the testator's mind must go with his testamentary act.
It is necessary for the validity of a will that the testator should be of sound mind, memory and understanding – words which have consistently been held to mean sound disposing mind. It is essential that the testator should know and approve of its contents ...

(Emphasis added.)

[57] His Lordship also referred to Halsbury's Laws of England (4th Edn, Vol 17) at paragraph 898 to elaborate on the term "sound disposing mind". The relevant excerpts of the judgment are as follows: 1

Halsbury's Laws of England (4th Edn) Vol 17 paragraph 898 thus enunciated a sound disposing mind: 5

"In order to be of sound disposing mind, a testator must not only be able to understand that he is by his will giving his property to one or more objects of his regard, but he must also have capacity to comprehend and to recollect the extent of his property and the nature of the claims of others whom by his will he is excluding from participation in that property ... It is essential that no disorder of the mind should poison his affections, pervert his sense of right or prevent the exercise of his natural faculties, that no delusion should influence his will in disposing of his property and bring about a disposal of it which, if the mind had been sound, would not have been made." 10 15

(Emphasis added.) 20

[58] In summary, the will could only be valid if the testator has testamentary capacity. What is meant by testamentary capacity is that the testator must be fully conscious, has a sound mind, understands and approves the contents of the will. 25

[59] In this connection, we refer to the Federal Court decision in Gan Yook Chin (supra) where his Lordship Steve Shim FC applied testamentary capacity test as enunciated by Chief Justice Cockburn in Banks v Goodfellow (supra) as cited at paragraph [53] of this judgment. 30

[60] In the case of Tan Cheu Kee v Lim Siew Hwa [2016] AMEJ 2304; [2016] 1 LNS 1684, the High Court adopted and applied the principle as set out in Banks v Goodfellow (supra) as follows: 35

In applying these principles, and particularly the test in Banks v Goodfellow, I have focused my mind to the determination of whether the deceased suffered from any "disease of the mind" and/or "insane delusion" when he executed the will and whether the circumstances leading to his act of committing suicide impairs testamentary capacity. Having sifted through the evidence, I do not find any evidence showing that the deceased suffered from any disease of the mind nor was delusional to the extent of insanity. The evidence of the witnesses who had interacted with the deceased immediately prior to him executing the will does not indicate any disease or infirmity of mind. Neither does the circumstances that led to the suicide indicate unsoundness of mind. There is absolutely no medical evidence to support the defendant's contention that the deceased was of unsound mind when he executed the will ... 40

...

1 Thus, considering the totality of evidence, and particularly the deceased's interactions with witnesses who testified at trial, I am convinced that in executing the will, the deceased understood the nature and effect of making a will as well as the extent of the property he was disposing and to whom he was disposing them to. And since the deceased is shown to 5 have testamentary capacity, the testator's will must be give effect to. ...

(Emphasis added.)

10 [61] In Tho Yow Pew & Anor v Chua Kooi Hean [2002] 3 AMR 3703; [2002] 4 CLJ
90 Gopal Sri Ram JCA (as he then was) stated:

15 ... Now, the law upon the subject of a testator's testamentary capacity, we find to be well settled. The decided cases show quite clearly that very slight testamentary capacity is required for the making of a will. The cases in which wills have been held invalid for lack of testamentary capacity involve testators who were utterly insane either upon the finding of the probate court or by reason of an order appointing a committee on the ground of insanity of the testator.

20 ...

25 What the law requires to vitiate testamentary capacity is an insane delusion existing at the time of making of the will. This will include insanity at the time of the making or giving instructions for the making of the will. There are numerous authorities on the point. We find it quite unnecessary to deal with all of them here. ...

(Emphasis added.)

30 [62] Testamentary capacity cannot be equated with contractual capacity. In the words of his Lordship Gopal Sri Ram JCA (as he then was) in *Lee Ing Chin
@ Lee Teck Seng & 4 Ors v Gan Yook Chin (p) & Anor* [2003] 2 AMR 357; [2003]
2 MLJ 97:

35 Thus, it may be soon that testamentary capacity is not to be equated with contractual capacity. A person may lack the mental capacity to enter into a contract and yet may have sufficient testamentary capacity.

40 [63] We venture to suggest that this approach is consistent with the concept of task-specific capacity, that is, that a person's capacity to make a decision in one area or task (for example will-making) is distinct and separate, and therefore cannot be extrapolated from their capacity to perform another task (for example entering into a contract and making decision about finances etc.).

[64] It is also a well settled principle that to displace prima facie testamentary capacity and due execution, mere proof of serious illness is not sufficient. There must be clear evidence that the illness of the testator so affected his mental faculties as to make the deceased unequal to the task of disposing of his property.

[65] This principle could be gleaned from a plethora of authorities. In Lee Ing Chin @ Lee Teck Seng & 4 Ors v Gan Yook Chin (p) & Anor [2003] 2 AMR 357; [2003] 2 MLJ 97, his Lordship Gopal Sri Ram JCA (as he then was) held that medical evidence must support that the deceased lacked testamentary capacity on the day the will is executed. The relevant portions of the judgment are as follows:

It may thus be seen that what the law primarily looks for as vitiating testamentary capacity is mental disorder or insane delusion. Mere bodily ill-health or imperfect memory is insufficient.

...

As we have said earlier, there was not a shred of evidence to show that the deceased lacked the mental capacity to make a will. We have had the evidence of the relevant witnesses (in particular DW1) on the point read over to us several times during argument. There is not a shred of evidence, medical or otherwise to show that the deceased lacked testamentary capacity on April 16, 1997. Accordingly, the finding by the learned judge against the validity of the will on the ground of the deceased's alleged mental incapacity was based on no evidence and cannot stand. Further, a close reading of the judgment of the learned judge shows that his finding of the lack of mental capacity based on the available medical evidence was a matter of pure speculation and conjecture. At the risk of repetition, we emphasise that the medical evidence does not support a conclusion that the deceased suffered from unsoundness of mind at any time, in particular at the date of the will.

(Emphasis added.)

[66] In Lee Ing Chin (supra), the deceased was 82 years old, suffering from terminal cancer and died less than two weeks after he made his last will. In this case, the testator was suffering from cancer of an aggressive nature where the testator's throat and oesophagus were affected and the testator was given intravenous drip and blood transfusion. Even so, the Court of Appeal upheld the will of the deceased and that decision was affirmed by the Federal Court. His Lordship Gopal Sri Ram JCA said:

The deceased was of course not in a state of perfect health because he was suffering from terminal cancer. But on the authorities, perfect health is not a sine qua non of testamentary capacity.

...

The mere fact that the deceased was seriously ill with cancer or that the first defendant being the propounder of the will was present at the execution of the will by the deceased does not in our judgment throw any doubt on the validity of the will. In the present instance, there is ample evidence, already adverted to, which supports a finding in favour of the validity of the will.

(Emphasis added.)

1 [67] In Lee Ing Chin (supra), the Court of Appeal cited an Indian case, that is,
5 Kishan Singh v Nichhattar Singh & Ors AIR 1983 P&H 373. In that case, a deaf and dumb person who was suffering from cancer of his back and head made a will. The court ruled that the testator's will is valid and held that:

5 ... the mere fact that the deceased was having cancer of the back did not mean that he was not in a fit mental condition to make the will. A testator of a will does not have to be found 10 to be in a perfect state of health to have his will declared valid. The only criterion is that the testator was capable of understanding the nature of his act, which was fully proved in this case. Further, the mere fact that the propounder of the will was present at the time of the execution of the will alone is not sufficient to doubt the genuineness of the will.

15 (Emphasis added.)

[68] Further, reference also can be made to the decision in Carmel Mary Soosai
v Josephine Lourdsamy Ratnavathy R Soosai & Ors [1987] CLJ (Rep) 498 where 20 the court opined:

... I now tum [turn] (sic) to the next allegation raised by the caveators, i.e., the deceased's lack of testamentary capacity due to ill-health.

25 It is not disputed that at the time of his death, the deceased was a chronic diabetic. He had already lost sight of his left eye and was slowly losing sight of the other. The medical evidence shows that he had been a chronic diabetic for at least five years before his death and this had led to him undergoing an operation on January 9, 1982 to 30 remove his prostate gland. Prior to that, on November 27, 1981, he had also undergone a cataract operation to correct his eye but this operation turned out to be unsuccessful as he had an irreversible damaged optic nerve which was already there before the operation. DW6, who provided the follow-up treatment after the operation, did not rule out the possibility that the deceased's chronic diabetic 35 condition could have caused the blindness to his left eye.

The three doctors who examined and treated him of his various ailments, DW4 for his diabetes, DW5 who performed the prostate gland operation and DW6 who did the follow-up treatment of his left eye, all agreed that they were not competent 40 to testify to the deceased's mental capacity during the period the will was executed as they have no professional qualifications. However, a psychiatrist of 28 years' standing, DW1, was more than prepared to testify that every person who suffers diabetes suffers mental incapacity. The most significant aspect of DW1's evidence is that he never saw or examined the deceased, and that his conclusion was based largely on his vast experience in the field of psychiatric medicine and on the medical report of DW4, DW5 and DW6 who examined and treated the deceased during the relevant period.

The deceased was an accountant and he managed his own firm, assisted by three employees who were not professionals. There is also evidence to show that during the period of ill-health, apart from the time when the deceased had to be hospitalised and after his two operations, followed by a period of recovery, he continued working in his office, keeping to his regular hours from 10.00 until 5.00 p.m. with a break for lunch. He continued doing so up to the day before his death ...

... On the consideration of all evidence pertaining to the deceased's mental capacity, the opinion of DW1, who never saw or examined the deceased cannot carry any weight ...

(Emphasis added.)

[69] In an English case, Re Simpson (deceased); Schaniel v Simpson [1977] 121 SJ 224, the court stated that the making of a will by an old and infirmed testator ought to be witnessed and approved by a medical practitioner who satisfies himself as to the capacity and understanding of the testator and makes a record of his examination and findings.

[70] However, it has been established by the Court of Appeal of England and other jurisdictions after Re Simpson (supra) that the principle stated in Re Simpson (supra) which is also known as the "golden rule" is merely guidance for solicitors and non-compliance did not mean that there was a lack of capacity. For example in the case of In The Matter of The Estate of Eva Burns, deceased: Burns & Ors v Burn [2016] EWCA Civ 37, it was held as follows:

The judge was also well aware of "the golden rule" and Mr Welton's apparent ignorance of it. It has to be recalled, however that the "rule" is a prudent guide for solicitors dealing with a will for an aged testator or one who has been seriously ill. As is pointed out in Williams Op Cit at paragraph 4.21, however, the rule does not constitute a rule of law but provides guidance as to a means of avoiding disputes; "it is not a touchstone of validity or a substitute for established tests of capacity or knowledge and approval".

(Emphasis added.)

[71] In Key & Anor v Key & Anor [2010] EWHC 408 (Ch), Briggs J noted that the "golden rule" was not a rule of law affecting the validity of a will but a recommendation for good practice. He said:

Compliance with the golden rule does not, of course, operate as a touchstone of the validity of a will, nor does non-compliance demonstrate its invalidity. Its purpose, as has repeatedly been emphasised, is to assist in the avoidance of disputes, or at least in the minimization of their scope. As the expert evidence in the present case confirms, persons with failing or impaired mental faculties may, for perfectly understandable reasons, seek to conceal what they regard as their embarrassing shortcomings from persons with whom they deal, so that a friend or professional person such as a solicitor may fail to detect defects in mental capacity which would be or become apparent to a trained and experienced medical examiner, to whom a proper description of the legal test for testamentary capacity had first been provided.

1 [72] Before concluding the issue under discussion, perhaps it would be useful to highlight a recent case decided in the United States of America which is of much relevance to the present case. The case is In Re Estate of Luce 21 ITELR 484 (No. 02-17-00097-CV, 2018 Tex App LEXIS 9341). In this case, 5 the Court of Appeal in Texas admitted a will where the testator had not personally signed the will and had merely communicated his wishes by blinking. The facts of the case are these: the testator was involved in a serious accident that left him in a quadriplegic condition. A week after he was 10 admitted to the hospital, he was intubated, which made him unable to speak.
Paralysed from the chest down and unable to move, the testator was only able to express by blinking his eyes to signify "yes" and "no". Through this blinking system, his lawyer was able to draft a will based on the testator's 15 blinking answers to a series of essential queries, and through this blinking system, he instructed a notary to sign the will for him.

20 [73] The Texas Court of Appeal ruled that the testator had sufficient mental ability to understand he was making a will, the effect of making the will, and the general nature and extent of his property. This is because, the evidence showed that the testator did not suffer any brain injury from the accident.
The medical records indicated that he was lucid.

25 [74] Further, according to the lawyer, the testator was of sound mind, and he had no concerns about the testator's capacity. The lawyer testified that he met the testator alone and had determined that they could communicate using the blinking system. The testator communicated that he wanted to make a 30 new will disposing of his assets and property, who he wanted to inherit under the new will, and that he intended to revoke any prior wills. The lawyer also testified that the testator understood the nature and extent of his assets and knew who his family members were. The testator, who was in the 35 midst of divorce proceedings with his wife, made it clear that he did not want his wife to take his assets under the new will.

40 [75] Moreover, two days after the will's execution, a doctor examined the testator who was still unable to speak because he was intubated, but they communicated by the testator nodding his head "yes" and "no" or by him casting his gaze at index cards labelled "yes" and "no." As a result of the examination, the doctor determined that the testator was fully competent and able to make his own decisions, including financial and medical decisions. Based on this evidence, the court affirmed the will of the testator.

[76] In the light of the authorities discussed above, the position in law on testamentary capacity is clear: if the testator is ill, it does not deprive his ability or capacity to execute it. There must be clear evidence to depict an insane delusion existing in the testator's mind at the time of making of the will. Essentially, it is sufficient for the testator, at the time the will is executed to have sufficient mental ability to understand he is making a will, the effect of making the will, and the general nature and extent of his property. The duty of the court is to give effect to the will of the testator and not deprive him of the right to select the beneficiaries based on his wish.

[77] Having said that, we must emphasise that testamentary capacity assessments are ultimately questions of fact to be determined by courts when the issue of a person's capacity arises in the course of legal proceedings. Therefore, the courts must scrutinise all the relevant evidence that was presented at the trial before reaching a decision on the balance of probabilities. In Nicholson v Knaggs [2009] VSC 64, Vickery J of the Supreme Court of Victoria said:

The proper approach of the court to the question whether a testator has testamentary capacity is clear. Although proof that a will was properly executed is prima facie evidence of testamentary capacity, where the evidence as a whole is sufficient to throw a doubt upon the testator's competency, the court must decide against the validity of the will unless it is satisfied affirmatively that he was of sound mind, memory and understanding when he executed it or, if instructions for the will preceded its execution, when the instructions were given.

Burden of proving testamentary capacity

[78] The legal principle on burden of proving testamentary capacity is clear as well. The burden is on the party propounding the will. In the present case it is the defendants.

[79] This position was well explained by learned author Sarkar on The Law of Evidence (14th Edn), Vol 2 at p 1396. The relevant part of the passage is reproduced hereunder:

Wills – The law has been thus stated in two well-known cases: "These rules are two; first, that the onus probandi lies in every case upon the party propounding a will and he must satisfy the conscience of the court that the instrument so propounded is the last will of a free and capable testator. The second is, that if a party writes or prepares a will, under which he takes a benefit, that is a circumstance that ought generally to excite suspicion of the court, and call upon it to be vigilant and jealous in examining the evidence in support of the instrument, in favour of which it ought not to pronounce unless the suspicion is removed, and it is judicially satisfied that the paper propounded does express the true will of the deceased ...

Those who propound a will must show that the will of which probate is sought is the will of the testator, and that the testator was a person of testamentary capacity. In ordinary cases, if there is no suggestion to the contrary, any man who is shown to have executed a will in ordinary form will be presumed to have testamentary capacity, but the moment the capacity is called in question, then at once the onus lies on those propounding the will to

1 affirm positively the testamentary capacity. Moreover, if a will is only proved in common and not in solemn form, the same rule applies even though the action is to attack a probate which has been granted long ago ...

5 A propounder of the will has to prove its due and valid execution and if there are any suspicious circumstances he must remove them from the mind of the court – Facts to be considered on the question of due execution of will.

(Emphasis added.)

10 [80] On this issue, our Federal Court in Gan Yook Chin (supra) neatly summed up the law in the following terms:

15 As regards the burden of proof, the Court of Appeal quite rightly stated the settled law, i.e. that where the validity of a will was challenged, the burden of proving testamentary capacity and due execution lay on the propounder of the will as well as dispelling any suspicious circumstances surrounding the making of the will; that the onus of establishing any extraneous vitiating element such as undue influence, 20 fraud or forgery lay with those who challenged the will. In this connection, we find the approach taken by the High Court of Australia in William Henry Bailey & Ors v Charles Lindsay Bailey & Ors (1924) 34 CLR 558 to be instructive. Therein
Isaacs J said inter alia:

25 "(1) The onus of proving that an instrument is the will of the alleged testator lies on the party propounding it; if this is not discharged, the court is bound to pronounce against the instrument.

30 (2) This onus means the burden of establishing the issue. It continues during the whole case and must be determined upon the balance of the whole evidence.

35 (3) The proponent's duty is, in the first place, discharged by establishing a prima facie case.

(4) A prima facie case is one which, having regard to the circumstances so far established by the proponent's testimony, satisfies the court judicially that the will propounded is the last will of a free and capable testator.

40 (5) A man may freely make his testament, howsoever old he may be; for it is not the integrity of the body, but of the mind, that is requisite in testaments.

(6) The quantum of evidence sufficient to establish a testamentary paper must always depend upon the circumstances of each case, because the degree of vigilance to be exercised by the court varies with the circumstances.

(7) As instances of such material circumstances may be mentioned: (a) the nature of the will itself regarded from the point of simplicity or complexity, or of its rational or irrational provisions, its exclusion or non-exclusion of beneficiaries; (b) the exclusion of persons naturally having a claim upon the testator; (c) extreme age, sickness, the fact of the drawer of the will or any person having motive and opportunity and exercising undue influence taking a substantial benefit. 1

(8) Once the proponent establishes a prima facie case of sound mind, memory and understanding with reference to the particular will, for capacity may be either absolute or relative, then the onus probandi lies upon the party impeaching the will to show that it ought not to be admitted to proof. 5

(9) To displace a prima facie case of capacity and due execution, mere proof of serious illness is not sufficient: there must be clear evidence that undue influence was in fact exercised, or that the illness of the testator so affected his mental faculties as to make them unequal to the task of disposing his property. 10

(10) The opinion of witnesses as to the testamentary capacity of an alleged testator is usually for various reasons of little weight on the direct issue. 15

(11) While, for instance, the opinions of the attesting witnesses that the testator was competent are not without some weight, the court must judge from the facts they state and not from their opinions." 20

(Emphasis added.)

[81] The Federal Court in Ong Eng Hock & Anor v Ong Cheng Guan & Anor [2018] 4 AMR 934; [2018] 7 CLJ 154 held as follows: 25

Leave question 1: Whether the probate rule that the burden of proving the instrument so propounded is the last will and testament of the testator applies in a case where the impugned will has already been admitted into probate and a sealed grant of probate issued by the High Court? 30

Answer: "Those who propound a will must show that the will of which probate is sought is the will of the testator ... has to prove its due execution and valid execution and if there are any suspicious circumstances ... remove them from the mind of the court ..." But where a will has been admitted to probate, the person who seeks revocation of the probate has to establish sufficient cause. 35

Question 2: Where the challenge to the impugned will is on ground of forgery, and specifically that the executor had forged the will, whether the burden lies entirely on the challenger in proving forgery? 40

Answer: Where the will has been admitted to probate, the person who seeks revocation of the probate on the ground of forgery has the burden and initial onus to prove forgery. Where the will has not been admitted to probate, it would appear from all cases decided that both propounder and challenger could not be absolutely freed from the burden and/or onus of proof.

(Emphasis added.)

[82] Reference is also made to Choo Mooi Kooi @ Choo Soo Yin v Choo Choon Jin @ Jimmy Choo (and Other Suits) [2011] AMEJ 0481; [2012] 2 MLJ 691. In this

1 case, Varghese George JC (as he then was) neatly summed up the law in the following terms:

5 In a nutshell the guiding principles in this area of law that could be distilled from the said decisions (as also from various other cases considered in them) could be summarised as follows:

- 10 (a) where the validity of a will is challenged, the testamentary capacity of the testator must be first established;
- 15 (b) the burden of proving:
 - (i) testamentary capacity; and
 - (ii) due execution was on the propounder of the will, as was also the burden of
 - (iii) dispelling any suspicious circumstances that surrounded the making of the will.
- 20 (c) there must be evidence that the contents of the will had been read over to the deceased and the deceased understood the dispositions being made;
- 25 (d) the onus then shifted to the party challenging the validity of the will to establish to the satisfaction of the court on relevant and cogent evidence the existence of any vitiating circumstances;
- 30 (e) mere suspicions or conjectures are not ordinarily sufficient to dispense the validity of the signature or the contents of the will;
- 35 (f) the court will not concern itself with the fairness of the disposition in the will once satisfied that the testator understood the dispositions being made and the will in question was duly executed;
- 40 (g) whether the execution of the impugned will was a result of "testamentary incapacity" (i.e. not of good health, sound mind, memory and understanding) was a specific finding of fact to be made on the totality of the evidence led before the court;
- (h) the burden of proof often shifts about in the process of the cause according to the successive steps of the inquiry, before leading to the decisive inferences to be made ... The propounder of the will still had the ultimate burden of dispelling any suspicious circumstances that may have surrounded the making of the will;
- (i) the elements or ingredients to be established on evidence to successfully uphold the consideration of "natural love and affection" as valid, included evidence of some spontaneous happening in the normal course of a relationship predicated by birth (natural) or a fondness or affection of mind (love) together with a measure of personal attachment or feeling for the other;

- (j) a duly executed MOT could still be invalidated and any transfer thereby registered could be set aside under s 340(2)(b) of the National Land Code 1965 as having been obtained through a "void or insufficient instrument": where it can on facts be shown that there was not exuberated any "natural love and affection" as between the transferor and the transferee; 1
5
- (k) the jurisdiction of the court to grant relief on an allegation that there was indeed "undue influence" exerted, is as wide and as flexible as the exigency of the case demand. The court could hold that there was undue influence even without direct proof of any dominance over the will of a party to a transaction ... 10
- (l) even where undue influence may not have been definitely established on evidence, the court could still strike down a will or instrument that had been challenged on that count, under the inherent duty of the court to be vigilant against suspicious circumstances which could go to the root of the validity of any document before the court. 15

[83] On the factual matrix of the present appeal, we agree with the findings of the Court of Appeal that the learned High Court judge had misapprehended the concept of secret trust and misdirected her mind in deciding that the deceased did not have the testamentary capacity to make the will dated December 18, 2013. We ourselves have perused the evidence on record and are satisfied that the defendants had adduced sufficient evidence at the trial to establish that the deceased had testamentary capacity to make the will on December 18, 2013. In our view, the learned High Court judge had failed to appreciate adequately, properly or at all the following evidence: 20
25
30

- (a) Although the deceased was suffering from terminal cancer of his kidney, it did not automatically mean that the deceased did not have the testamentary capacity on December 18, 2013 by reason of his cancer. It was sufficient for the deceased to have a sound mind on December 18, 2013. 35
- (b) The evidence of DW1, the advocate who prepared the will and his secretary, DW2, who witnessed the execution of the will by the deceased on December 18, 2013 shows that the deceased was very clear in his mind when he gave instructions to DW1 on December 18, 2013 in the morning, and when he executed the will on December 18, 2013 in the afternoon. The deceased also gave specific instructions to DW1 in person and in private to name both the defendants as executors, after being informed by DW1 that there was a requirement to have two executors if he has minor children. This proves that the 40

- 1 deceased was of sound mind, able to comprehend and had in his mind that his minor child with his second wife, who was still studying at that point in time, were the true beneficiaries of his estate.
DW1 and DW2 are independent and disinterested witnesses.
- 5
- (c) All the five witnesses who saw the deceased on December 18, 2013
affirmatively and consistently stated that the deceased was of sound mind, lucid, conscious, mentally alert and able to communicate on 10 December 18, 2013.
- (d) The plaintiffs called as their witness, PW1, a urologist and the only doctor who treated the deceased. A careful scrutiny of the testimony 15 of PW1 reveals that the plaintiffs failed to establish that the deceased did not have testamentary capacity. PW1 did not see the deceased on December 18, 2013. Apart from that, PW1 testified that when he last saw the deceased on December 13, 2013, although the deceased was 20 disturbed, he was still lucid, conscious and of sound mind. Therefore, the phrase "... still having trouble to cope with the disease, mentally and physically" stated by PW1 in his letter dated December 13, 2013 could not be taken as evidence of a lack of testamentary capacity on 25 December 18, 2013. PW1 did not see the deceased on the day the will was executed by the deceased, and when he last saw the deceased on December 13, 2013, he confirmed that the deceased was still lucid, conscious and of sound mind.
- 30
- (e) The defendants also called Dr Azlan as their last witness who also was an expert witness. Dr Azlan's testimony on the medication prescribed to the deceased and the possibility of any side effects are 35 consistent with PW1's testimony and observation that the deceased was lucid, conscious and of sound mind.
- (f) There were also no independent medical evidence before the trial 40 court to substantiate the plaintiffs' assertions that the deceased did not have testamentary capacity to execute the will which he executed on December 18, 2013. Thus, in our view, the issue of the deceased's allegedly impaired mental health was not proven at any point in time.
- (g) The defendants established that the will is the last will of a free and capable testator. The defendants also established a prima facie case of a sound mind, memory and understanding with reference to the particular will.

[84] The learned High Court judge failed to consider sufficiently or at all the above evidence and facts which are favourable to the defendants. It is trite that when a trial judge fails to properly analyse or analyse at all the entirety of the evidence adduced on record before the court, it is the duty of the appellate court to intervene and correct the decision. The Court of Appeal was right in interfering with the findings of fact by the learned High Court judge on the issue of the deceased's testamentary capacity.

[85] Based on the aforesaid, it is our considered view that the second leave question is irrelevant. However, even if the question must be answered, it must be answered in the affirmative.

The third leave question

[86] The argument most pressed and relied upon by the plaintiffs is that the doctrine of secret trust is against public policy because it is used to assist the testator's purported "sins" or "skeletons in the cupboard" to benefit his "genes or acquaintance".

[87] With respect, the submission is misconceived. The overriding purpose behind secret trusts is to enable property to be left in a will without explicitly naming who the property is being left to, by a bequest to a person who has previously promised to hold that property as trustee for the intended recipient. As wills are, by nature, public documents open to scrutiny, the concealment of identity that a secret trust provides is vital for those desiring a degree of privacy in the final disposal of their estate. In one sense, it would indeed not be in "good conscience" to deny a testator the ability to distribute their estate as they see fit.

[88] We find support in the following statement by Lord Sumner in the case of Blackwell v Blackwell [1929] AC 318 as follows:

In itself the doctrine of equity, by which parol evidence is admissible to prove what is called "fraud" in connection with secret trusts, and effect is given to such trusts when established, would not seem to conflict with any of the Acts under which from time to time the Legislature has regulated the right of testamentary disposition.

[89] Tommy Cheung in his article "Secret Trusts and Testamentary Freedom" in Trusts & Trustees [2019] Vol 25(7), pp 730-736, had this to say:

An express trust is an "act of a party", whereas a constructive trust "arises by operation of law as from the date of the circumstances which give rise to it". Equity enforces secret trusts because testators expressly create them. It would be unfair to the testator if the courts were to disallow his/her last wish based on a formality issue. Thus, equity looks to the substance rather than the form.

1 When we look at Section 9 of the Wills Act 1837, there are undeniably formal requirements attached to testamentary dispositions. However, they are only there to prevent the fraudulent or unconscionable acts of any individual. Importantly, they require substantial evidence to prove the intent of the testator. The formality 5 promotes and protects the testator's freedom to dispose of his/her property as he/she wishes after death. The individual's right to control his/her property is part of the policy underlying the Wills Act 1837. It is a public policy in which equity aims to protect a testator's testamentary disposition and ensures that it runs according to his/her intent so long as it does not contradict other principles 10 or policies.

[90] The concept of secret trust is consistent with the fundamental human right of privacy. Sheridan, LA in his article "English and Irish Secret Trusts" 15 [1951] 67 LQR 314 opined:

... the desire of a testator for secrecy about his dispositions is just as much indulgeable as the desire of the State to ensure the existence of reasonable evidence of those dispositions. The trouble with the Wills Act is that it tries to 20 provide for the evidence without making allowance for the secrecy. Any new provision that may be enacted would have to endeavour to strike a balance between the need for evidence and the desire for secrecy.

25 [91] Nwudego Nkemakonam Chinwuba in his article "Filling The Gaps Between Colonial Legal Heritage And Prevailing Local Customs In Family Relations: The Place Of Secret Trust" [2016] African Journal of International and Comparative Law, Vol 24(1), pp 45-63 articulated:

30 The view that remains apposite is that it is a trust that has evolved with the "face of common humanity" to uphold the private intentions of men or the last wishes of a dying human. The tension that arises from testacy and acceptance of the secret trust as a valid trust within a strict regime of testacy laws indicates that the 35 recognition of the trust is not based on a right to property alone. For the right to property with its incident of free alienation, is steeped in limitations while the secret trust is a humanistic principle based on the good nature of earlier generations who made allowance for the evolutionary nature of wrong and right 40 in the life of a human being.

[92] Further, the author noted as follows:

Thus one can assert that the secret trust is a legitimate legal tool that assures a person space. Against the interest of the settlor to dispose of his property privately is also the interest of the recipient.

[93] To deny the existence of an agreement between the testator and the intended trustee would be to commit a fraud, and, providing the trust complies with the requisite conditions, it is unrealistic to uphold a strict reading of statute to allow the trust to fail. The court may intervene if there is a risk of an unconscionable result, like the denial of a testator's wishes. Alastair Hudson, in Understanding Equity & Trusts (9th Edn, Routledge, 2015) p 70 notes that "the purpose of equity is to introduce fairness in circumstances in which statute might permit unfairnesses".

[94] Another justification of the enforcement of secret trusts is that it is made outside and independently of the will. This "dehors the will" theory provides that the secret trust is not created by the will, but rather arises from the independent obligation accepted by the trustee. It was utilised and developed by the House of Lords in Blackwell (supra) and its overwhelming advantage is that it does not presuppose a contradiction between the enforcement of secret trusts and the English Wills Act 1837. The trustee/legatee promises to perform acts outside the will, and equity enforces these inter vivos promises as the testator desires because "equity looks into the intent rather than the form", which always compliments the statues, but is not confined by them. Danckwerts J in Re Young [1951] Ch 344 at 350, in holding a secret trust valid, stated that:

... [the person] does not take by virtue of the gift in the will, but by virtue of the secret trusts imposed upon the [trustee] who does in fact take under the will.

[95] The modern justification of the enforcement of secret trusts was neatly summarised by Megarry VC in Re Snowden (supra):

... the whole basis of secret trusts, as I understand it, is that they operate outside the will, changing nothing that is written in it, and allowing it to operate according to its tenor, but then fastening a trust on to the property in the hands of the recipient. It is at least possible that very different standards of proof may be appropriate for cases where the words of a formal document have to be altered and for cases where there is no such alteration but merely a question whether, when the document has been given effect to, there will be some trust of the property with which it dealt.

[96] There are passages to the like effect in Lewin on Trusts (18th Edn, Sweet & Maxwell, 2008) and Halsbury's Laws of England, (4th Edn, Butterworths, London 2007 Reissue). The editors in Lewin said in paragraph 3-077 as follows:

The competing explanation of secret trusts is that the statutory requirements of the Wills Act 1837 are entirely disregarded since the secondary donee does not take by virtue of the will.

[97] The editors in Halsbury's Laws of England explained in paragraph 672:

Creation of secret trusts. Secret trusts have commonly been regarded as a product of the principle that equity does not allow the statute which requires certain

1 written formalities for the creation of interest in land to be used as an instrument of fraud. More recent cases, however, appear to establish that there is no conflict with the Wills Act 1837 since the trust operates outside as it is said, dehors the will.
... This trust is not regarded as a testamentary disposition coming within the Wills 5 Act 1837 but as a trust within the ordinary equity jurisdiction.

[98] Alastair Hudson, in his book Equity and Trusts (8th Edn, Routledge 2015)
at p 323 observes that secret trusts constitute an exception to the English Wills Act. The author had this to say:

10 One further explanation of the operation of secret trusts would be, quite simply, that they constitute an exception to the Wills Act which defies straightforward definition ... it does not correlate easily with the existing rules concerning trusts 15 and therefore its difference ought to be recognised as much as the possibilities of its complying with more general principles of English trusts law. ... it is only possible to correlate secret trusts with the broadest possible principles of the law of trusts: that is, that the conscience of the secret trustee will prevent that person from denying the office imposed on him once he receives a gift under the will.

[99] Similarly, Snell's Equity (33rd Edn), paragraphs 24-031 at p 663 states as follows:

25 The preferable theory is that secret trusts operate outside the will. They rest on the simple principle of enforcing the equitable obligations binding a man's conscience, and do not depend on specific proof of fraudulent conduct by the trustee. The will is only relevant as far as it completes the constitution of the trust 30 by vesting the property in the intended trustee. Accordingly, since the title of a beneficiary under a secret trust arises outside the will, he does not lose his benefits if he witnesses the will or predeceases the testator. On the other hand, if the secret trustee predeceases the testator the secret trust probably fails because there is a failure of the legacy upon which the trust was intended to operate.

35 [100] In that regard, the Court of Appeal had correctly observed at paragraph 11(c) that:

40 ... the court's endorsement of the secret trust does not breach the Wills Act or any other statutory law. ... It only goes to show bona fide and the true intention of the testator, if the plea of the secret trust succeeds. Thus, as a general rule, the only instance the probate can be set aside is in a case, if the respondent had established the testator did not have testamentary capacity to execute the said will.

(Emphasis added.)

[101] Quite recently, the Hong Kong Court of Appeal in Tsang Tat Hung & Anor v Tsang Tat Wing [2017] HKCU 1165 quoted with approval the following view:

Principles of secret trusts

35.1. The principles governing secret trusts have been set out in Lewin on Trusts 19th ed paragraph 3-076 as follows:

"These are trusts outside a will that affect a beneficiary under a will [the 1st plaintiff]. Equity has engrafted on the above common law principles rules of its own, by which the primary donee taking under a will [the 1st plaintiff] may be compelled to hold the gift [the part share of the Property] on trust for a secondary donee [the 2nd plaintiff] under an arrangement with the testator [the Deceased] taking effect outside the will. Such trusts are called "secret trusts" because one reason for creating them is to keep the ultimate beneficial interest out of the will, which is a public document. Secret trusts arise where a testator intends his gift to the primary donee to be employed as he, and not the primary donee, desires and tells the primary donee of his intention and (either by an express promise or by the tacit promise which is signified by acquiescence) the primary donee encourages the testator to bequeath his money in the belief that his intentions will be carried out. ..."

(Emphasis added.)

35.2. Although that passage refers to "encouragement": it is clear that that is not essential to the creation of a secret trust as the editors of Lewin said in the following paragraph (3-077):

"The equitable rules seem originally to have been based upon there having been a fraudulent encouragement of the testator but the fraud theory has more recently been formulated in terms that equity fastens a trust on the primary donee under the will where his conscience is bound by the extraneous arrangement. The competing explanation of secret trusts is that the statutory requirements of the Wills Act 1837 are entirely disregarded since the secondary donee does not take by virtue of the will. Though the facts commonly involve immoral and selfish conduct on the part of the primary donee that is not a necessary element. This would seem to support the theory that secret trusts take effect outside the will, which is relevant only so far as it completes the constitution of the trust."

[102] What can be distilled from the above discussion is that a secret trust, as a creature of common law, operates outside the formalities of the Wills Act 1959. Nevertheless, a secret trust is a form of an inter vivos express trust in which the testator and trustee mutually agree to form a trust relationship for

1 the lifetime of the testator. Once this is understood, one can also understand that secret trusts are enforced to promote the main policy principle behind the Wills Act 1959: to protect the testamentary freedom of testators.

5 [103] In Malaysia, the testamentary freedom of a testator was recognised long before the Wills Act 1959 was enacted. Taylor J in Re Tan Soh Sim (deceased); Chan Lam Keong & 4 Ors v Tan Saw Keow & 3 Ors [1951] 1 LNS 77
observed as follows:

10 By the year 1930 a much higher proportion of the non-Malay population had become domiciled in the Malay States and the practical difficulty of administering a variety of personal laws, especially in relation to intestate succession, had greatly increased. This and other causes led to the passing of the Distribution 15 Enactment (Now Cap 71) which repealed the Recognition Order in Council and introduced the main provisions of the English Statute of Distribution, 22 & 23 Charles 11, Cap 10, to govern succession to the estate of every intestate (other than a Moslem) who died locally domiciled. This was not in any sense an attack on 20 Chinese custom or on any other personal law. Testamentary freedom is absolute. The Chinese property-owning classes are accustomed to making wills and the practice is not uncommon among the Indian and other communities. They were all put on the same basis and, granted a local domicile, there was no room for uncertainty. Everybody 25 could give full effect by his will to his own personal views on family succession, customary or otherwise, and if he did not make a will, then the one statute applied irrespective of the community. But as regards other matters within the domain of the personal law, such as marriage, adoption and guardianship, the law of Perak 30 reverted to the state in which it was before 1893 and the law of the other states remained in the same state as it had been in throughout—namely, that in the absence of any statutory provision, the courts applied the personal law of the community concerned.

(Emphasis added.)

35 [104] Thus elucidated, any inconsistency or contradiction between the doctrine of secret trust and the Malaysian Wills Act 1959 is a non-starter. In the premise, the third leave question is answered in the negative.

40 Conclusion

[105] We have given our anxious consideration to the submissions advanced on behalf of the plaintiffs/appellants but we do not find any merit in the appellant's submissions to justify interference with the Court of Appeal's judgment.

[106] In this instant appeal, in giving effect to the secret trust, the Court of Appeal took into consideration various factors which include: 1

(i) respect over the principle of testamentary freedom and the testator's last wish; 5

(ii) secret trust is an established principle of trusts law; and

(iii) the interest of society requires that a testator should make adequate provision for his surviving family. 10

[107] For those reasons, we affirmed the decision of the Court of Appeal and dismissed the appeal with costs. So ordered. 15

20

25

30

35

40